Re: Letter to David Greenberg from John Graham, Harvard Center for Risk Analysis, dated Oct 21, 1991.

Coincidentally, as I was looking at this letter I was on the phone with Mayada just prior to her breakfast meeting with Graham in Washington this morning. (I told her about its contents in case Graham were to bring it up; she will not mention it first.)

My reaction: I think that a meeting should be arranged with Graham when he calls Greenberg and that you should try to attend. It doesn't hurt to talk to the guy - he says: "It is important for me to learn more about the risk-related challenges that you (PM) face." Why not take him up on the offer? Sure, he's after $ to help support his Center, but whether or not PM decides to contribute it's more important to meet him and perhaps get 'looped in' better with his activities. From all that Mayada has learned, he is a key player in all this risk analysis stuff that's currently going on in the government. (Depending on the 'vibes' you guys get when you meet Graham, I would also be in favor of PM becoming a contributor to the Center.)
