Dear Mr. Dozier:

I was interested to note a statement on your web site that the “types of businesses” that we defend, and from which, you allege, we receive contributions, extort money from businesses by promising to help them clean up their public image and remove criticisms from their web sites, and also place comments attacking businesses on their web sites that purportedly come from anonymous speakers but are really written by the web site operators. I also noted that you were very careful not to identify any specific web site operator who both is a client or contributor of ours, and engages in this conduct.

If you have any basis for believing that Justin Leonard, or any other Public Citizen client or contributor, has done this – or if you have any evidence supporting such a belief – I’d be very interested in seeing it. I urge you to name names.

Sincerely yours,

Paul Alan Levy
