<sup>1</sup> Individual contribution limits are increased when a candidate's opponent spends personal funds above specified thresholds. Senate candidates are limited to self financing of $150,000 plus 4 cents times the voting age population of the state. House candidates are limited to self-financing of $350,000. When these thresholds are breached, individual contribution limits increase three-fold or more, depending on the level of self financing.

<sup>2</sup> Individual contribution limits to federal candidates and national party committees, and the national party committee's contribution limit to Senate candidates, are indexed for inflation. No other contribution limits are adjusted for inflation.

<sup>3</sup> National, state and local party committees are also permitted to make "coordinated party expenditures" in support of federal candidates. These coordinated expenditures do not count against the contribution limits. Coordinated party expenditures are subject to varying limits based on population and level of office.
