IN THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA CIRCUIT

ISAAC HARRIS, et al.,

Plaintiffs-Respondents,

v.

MEDICAL TRANSPORTATION
MANAGEMENT, INC.,

Defendant-Petitioner.

No. 21-8006

PLAINTIFFS-RESPONDENTS' MOTION TO LIFT THE ABEYANCE AND DENY MTM'S RULE 23(f) PETITION

On August 20, 2020, Defendant-Petitioner Medical Transportation Management (MTM) sought permission from two different courts to pursue interlocutory appeals of two separate but related issues: It filed in this Court a petition for interlocutory appeal of the district court's class-certification decision pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(f), and it simultaneously filed in the district court a motion to certify for immediate appeal the district court's decision denying decertification of the Fair Labor Standards Act (FLSA) collective action pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). On November 3, 2021, this Court ordered that the case be held in abeyance, and it directed the parties to file motions to govern further proceedings within 30 days of the district court's resolution of MTM's motion under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b).

On November 22, 2021, the district court denied MTM's motion under § 1292(b). Mem. Op., ECF No. 200 (attached as Exh. 1). The district court also denied MTM's motion for a stay pending this Court's resolution of the Rule 23(f) petition, and it set a schedule for further proceedings. Minute Order of Dec. 10, 2021 (attached as Exh. 2).

Because the district court denied MTM's motion under § 1292(b), this Court lacks jurisdiction to review the decision denying decertification of the FLSA collective. To avoid piecemeal appeals of the Rule 23(c)(4) class-certification and FLSA collective-certification decisions, and for the reasons set forth in plaintiffs' opposition (filed August 27, 2021) and Rule 28(j) letter (filed September 27, 2021), this Court should lift the abeyance and deny MTM's Rule 23(f) petition.

BACKGROUND

MTM provides non-emergency medical transportation services to Medicaid participants in the District of Columbia. Plaintiffs are drivers who allege that MTM is their joint employer and a general contractor and, as such, is liable for the underpayment of the drivers' wages under the FLSA and District of Columbia wage laws. On August 6, 2020, the district court granted Rule 23(c)(4) class certification for resolution of the common, threshold issues of whether MTM is a joint employer or general contractor. App. A-81–A-82. It also concluded that the plaintiffs were “similarly situated” under the FLSA as to the common issue of whether MTM is a joint employer, and it accordingly denied MTM’s motion to decertify the FLSA collective. App. A-77–A-79.

On August 20, 2021, MTM petitioned this Court for permission to appeal the class-certification order. The same day, MTM filed a motion in the district court to certify for interlocutory appeal the denial of MTM’s motion to decertify the FLSA collective action, and a motion to stay proceedings in the district court. On November 22, 2021, the district court denied both motions.

MTM’s motion under § 1292(b) sought certification of two questions for interlocutory review: (i) the standard for determining whether a group of plaintiffs is “similarly situated” under the FLSA; and (ii) whether the question of joint-employer status can be the basis for an FLSA collective action.¹ As to the former question, the court held that the standard for determining whether plaintiffs are similarly situated was not a “controlling question of law” warranting “the exceptional step of interlocutory review,” because a differing standard would not “make any difference here, let alone ‘materially affect the course of litigation.’” Mem. Op. 4–5.

As to the latter question regarding whether the joint-employer issue can support certification of an FLSA collective, the district court found that MTM had failed to satisfy the requirements for § 1292(b) certification for multiple reasons. First, the court concluded that there was not a “substantial ground for difference of opinion” as to this question” and noted that the handful of out-of-circuit district court cases that MTM cited were not persuasive. Id. at 6–7. Next, the district court rejected MTM’s theory that proof of a common policy or practice is necessary—as opposed to sufficient—to proceed collectively on the joint-employer issue, explaining that “MTM makes an inferential leap that no appellate court has made.” Id. at 7. Finally, the district court concluded that interlocutory review of the court’s certification of an FLSA collective based on the joint-employer question would not materially advance the disposition of the litigation, because the burden on the parties and the court would not change even if the collective were decertified. Id. at 8–10.

Reasoning that the case had already been delayed long enough, the district court also denied MTM’s motion for a stay of proceedings pending this Court’s resolution of the Rule 23(f) petition. Id. at 11.

On December 10, 2021, the district court set a schedule for further proceedings. Exh. 2. Discovery on the joint-employer and general-contractor issues concludes on March 11, 2022, and a post-discovery status conference has been set for March 15, 2022. Id.

ARGUMENT

I. MTM’s petition for interlocutory appeal of the class-certification order should be denied because this Court lacks jurisdiction to review the separate but related order denying decertification of the FLSA collective.

Because the district court denied MTM’s motion under § 1292(b), this Court lacks jurisdiction to review the district court’s decision regarding the FLSA collective. See Strange on Behalf of Strange v. Islamic Republic of Iran, 964 F.3d 1190, 1192 (D.C. Cir. 2020) (stating that “[b]efore an aggrieved litigant can invoke our interlocutory jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), the district court must certify its order for appeal”); see also In re Powerhouse Licensing, LLC, 441 F.3d 467, 471 n.2 (6th Cir. 2006) (stating that “[c]ertification of an order under § 1292(b) is discretionary with the district court and is not subject to review”).

Where, as here, the district court has denied certification of a question for interlocutory review under § 1292(b), this Court must reject MTM’s invitation to exercise pendent appellate review over the same question. A contrary result would impermissibly circumvent the requirements of § 1292(b). See Gilda Marx, Inc. v. Wildwood Exercise, Inc., 85 F.3d 675, 679 (D.C. Cir. 1996) (per curiam) (stating that “pendent appellate jurisdiction may be declined if the appealing party has, intentionally or not, circumvented the district court's authority to decide whether to endorse an interlocutory appeal under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b)").

Granting MTM's Rule 23(f) petition would result in piecemeal appeals—one for the Rule 23(c)(4) class-certification decision now and another for the FLSA collective-certification decision later. Such an approach undermines the “careful calibration” in Rule 23(f) that was “designed to be a guard against abuse of the appellate process.” Microsoft Corp. v. Baker, 137 S. Ct. 1702, 1709–10 (2017) (citation omitted). Accordingly, MTM's petition under Rule 23(f) should be denied so that the related issues can be considered together following final judgment.

II. The district court's decision denying certification of an interlocutory appeal under § 1292(b) supports denial of MTM's petition under Rule 23(f).

MTM contends that Rule 23(c)(4) class certification is not permitted in the absence of “common conduct” by MTM causing injury to the class. Pet. 18–19; Reply 6–7. In its decision denying MTM's motion under § 1292(b), the district court rejected an analogous argument made by MTM, and it concluded that the cases that MTM cited to support its theory—two of which MTM also cited in its Rule 23(f) petition—were not persuasive.

In its § 1292(b) motion, MTM contended that plaintiffs were not “similarly situated” as to the joint-employer issue in the absence of a common policy or practice by MTM. The district court disagreed, noting that MTM had failed to cite any persuasive authority showing that the existence of a common policy or practice was necessary to maintain the FLSA collective. See Mem. Op. 7. The court rejected MTM’s reliance on Edmonds v. Amazon.com, Inc., 2020 WL 5993908 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 9, 2020), and Arnold v. DirectTV, LLC, 2017 WL 1251033 (E.D. Mo. Mar. 31, 2017), stating that it was “skeptical of the rationale” of those cases. Mem. Op. 6–7. And the court faulted MTM for an “inferential leap that no appellate court has made,” explaining that the cases cited by MTM “show at most that ‘a common policy or practice might be sufficient to show party plaintiffs are similarly situated,’ not that a common policy or practice is ‘necessary.’” Id. at 7.

This Court should likewise reject MTM’s argument that the lack of a common policy or practice defeats Rule 23(c)(4) class certification. MTM relies on both Edmonds and Arnold to support its Rule 23(f) petition. See

Pet. 19–20 (citing Arnold and Edmonds); Reply 7 n.4 (citing Arnold). As the district court explained in its § 1292(b) decision, the fact that Edmonds and Arnold included a common policy or practice on the facts of those cases does not mean that such a common policy or practice is a necessary element of class certification. See also App. A-78–79 n.8 (“Just as the court noted in the context of an FLSA collective ... although a common policy might in some cases be sufficient to warrant issue certification, MTM cites no case suggesting that a common policy is required.”).

III. MTM’s Rule 23(f) petition should be denied for the reasons set forth in plaintiffs’ opposition and Rule 28(j) letter.

As plaintiffs explained in their previous submissions, MTM’s Rule 23(f) petition should be denied. The Rule 23(c)(4) certification does not present a death-knell situation (as MTM concedes), there is no unsettled and fundamental legal issue likely to evade end-of-case review, and the district court did not commit manifest error. Thus, there is no basis to disturb the traditional path of appeals following final judgment in the case. See In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98, 105 (D.C. Cir. 2002) (stating the standard for Rule 23(f) review).

Moreover, as the district court has explained, this litigation will continue regardless of the outcome of any interlocutory appeal. See Mem. Op. 10 (stating that “[c]ertification for interlocutory review ... would not ‘hasten or at least simplify the litigation in some material way, such as by significantly narrowing the issues, conserving judicial resources, or saving the parties from needless expense’”). The same threshold issue of MTM’s status as a joint employer will be decided by the district court, either as a Rule 23(c)(4) class action, an FLSA collective action, or in potentially hundreds of individual cases. Interlocutory review of the Rule 23(c)(4) certification decision would result in needless expense and protracted delay in a case that already has been pending for more than four years, and it would undermine the district court’s management of this complex case. Accordingly, MTM’s petition should be denied. See In re Lorazepam, 289 F.3d at 105 (stating that “interlocutory appeals are generally disfavored as ‘disruptive, time consuming, and expensive’ for both the parties and the courts”); see also id. (cautioning that “the exception provided by Rule 23(f) should be exercised in a manner that avoids ... micromanagement of complex class actions as they evolve in the district court”).

CONCLUSION

The Court should lift the abeyance and deny MTM's Rule 23(f) petition.

MEMORANDUM OPINION AND ORDER

Defendant Medical Transportation Management, Inc. (“MTM”) seeks interlocutory review of this court’s refusal to decertify a collective action under the Fair Labor Standards Act (“FLSA”). MTM also requests a stay of discovery pending a decision from the D.C. Circuit on whether to review a separate but related decision by this court to certify an issue class. The D.C. Circuit has deferred its decision pending a ruling by this court on MTM’s motion for interlocutory review.

For the reasons discussed below, the court finds that an immediate appeal of the FLSA decertification denial would not “conserve judicial resources and spare the parties from possibly needless expense if it should turn out that this Court’s ruling[] [is] reversed.” APCC Servs., Inc. v. Sprint Commc’ns Co., 297 F. Supp. 2d 90, 100 (D.D.C. 2003). Accordingly, MTM’s motion to certify is denied, and so too is its motion for a stay.

I.

MTM is a private company that contracts with the District of Columbia to manage and administer non-emergency medical transportation services for the District’s Medicaid recipients. MTM does not provide the transportation services itself; rather, it contracts with dozens of transportation service providers (“TSPs”) that, in turn, employ drivers who take Medicaid recipients to and from medical appointments. Plaintiffs Isaac Harris, Darnell Frye, and Leo Franklin have worked at various times as drivers for different TSPs contracting with MTM. They filed this action four years ago, individually and on behalf of all others similarly situated (collectively, “Plaintiffs”), against MTM to recover unpaid wages under (1) the FLSA, 29 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.; (2) the D.C. Minimum Wage Act, D.C. Code § 32-1001 et seq.; (3) the D.C. Living Wage Act, D.C. Code § 2-220.01 et seq.; and (4) the D.C. Wage Payment and Collection Law, D.C. Code § 32-1301. Plaintiffs allege that because MTM is both their joint employer and the general contractor of the TSPs, MTM is liable for their unpaid wages under federal and District of Columbia wage laws.

In August 2021, this court issued an order (1) denying MTM’s motion to decertify the FLSA collective action this court conditionally certified in July 2018 and (2) granting Plaintiffs’ motion to certify an issue class under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(c)(4). Harris v. Med. Transp. Mgmt., Inc., No. 17-cv-1371 (APM), 2021 WL 3472381, at *1 (D.D.C. Aug. 6, 2021). As relevant here, the court concluded that (1) Plaintiffs were “similarly situated” for purposes of the FLSA on the question whether MTM qualifies as their joint employer; (2) the case could proceed as a collective action on the joint-employer question; and (3) the question whether MTM is a joint employer or a general contractor would “materially advance the litigation” and so could proceed on an issue-class basis under Rule 23(c)(4). Id. at *7, *10.¹

¹ The FLSA makes a business liable for unpaid wages if it is deemed a joint employer. See Harris v. Med. Transp. Mgmt., Inc., 300 F. Supp. 3d 234, 240 (D.D.C. 2018). District of Columbia wage laws similarly extend liability based on joint-employer status, see id. at 246, but they also impose liability if the business is deemed a general contractor of a sub-contractor, D.C. Code § 32-1012(c). The question of MTM’s status as a general contractor therefore is relevant only to the certified issue class and not the collective action under the FLSA.

II.

Under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b), certifying an order for interlocutory appeal is appropriate when “(1) the order involves a controlling question of law; (2) a substantial ground for difference of opinion concerning the ruling exists; and (3) an immediate appeal would materially advance the litigation.” APCC Servs., 297 F. Supp. 2d at 95. The party seeking interlocutory review “bears the burden of showing that exceptional circumstances justify a departure from the basic policy of postponing appellate review until after the entry of final judgment.” Virtual Def. & Dev. Int’l, Inc. v. Republic of Moldova, 133 F. Supp. 2d 9, 22 (D.D.C. 2001) (internal quotation marks omitted). Given the “strong congressional policy against piecemeal reviews, and against obstructing or impeding an ongoing judicial proceeding by interlocutory appeals,” certification is only appropriate in the court’s discretion and upon satisfaction of all three of the elements of § 1292(b). Jud. Watch, Inc. v. Nat’l Energy Pol’y Dev. Grp., 233 F. Supp. 2d 16, 20 (D.D.C. 2002) (quoting United States v. Nixon, 418 U.S. 683, 690 (1974)).

Here, none of the four ostensibly “controlling question[s] of law,” id. at 19, identified by MTM satisfies all three elements.

A.

The first question MTM identifies as “controlling” is “[w]hether the test applied in the Court’s [August 2021] Order constitutes the proper standard for determining whether a group of plaintiffs is ‘similarly situated’ for purposes of the FLSA collective action provision.” Def.’s Mot. to Amend and Certify Order of Aug. 6, 2021 for Interlocutory Appeal, ECF No. 189, Mem. of Law in Supp. of Def.’s Mot., ECF No. 189-1 [hereinafter Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem.], at 2. In its August 2021 opinion, this court noted that the D.C. Circuit has “not yet spoken” on what makes persons “similarly situated” for purposes of an FLSA collective action and so considered the three approaches taken by federal courts: (1) the so-called “ad hoc” approach followed by one Circuit court and many district courts, (2) “the minority approach” that places the collective-action question under the lens of Rule 23’s class-action requirements, and (3) the approach taken by the Ninth Circuit in Campbell v. City of Los Angeles, 903 F.3d 1090, 1104 (9th Cir. 2018). See Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *3. The court ultimately settled on the Campbell approach because it, unlike the other two contenders, does not “import[], through a back door, . . . the [Federal Rule of Civil Procedure] 23(b)(3) requirements” or “focus[] on points of potential factual or legal dissimilarity between party plaintiffs when the focus should be, in light of the collective action’s reason for being within the FLSA, whether the party plaintiffs are alike with regard to some material aspect of their litigation.” Id. at *3 (alteration and internal quotation marks omitted).

“[T]he differing results reached in the various decisions cited in the [August 2021] Order,” Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 5, arguably satisfy the interlocutory-review requirement that there must be a “substantial ground for difference of opinion” as to what “similarly situated” means under the FLSA. APCC Servs., 297 F. Supp. 2d at 95. But MTM must also demonstrate that this question is “controlling.” Id. It is not. Merely showing that the question is unsettled is not enough. See Wash. Tennis & Educ. Found., Inc. v. Clark Nexsen, Inc., 324 F. Supp. 3d 128, 145 (D.D.C. 2018) (holding that the mere fact an issue is “one of first impression” does not require or justify interlocutory review). Rather, MTM must show that the question “would require reversal if decided incorrectly” or “could materially affect the course of litigation with resulting savings of the court’s or the parties’ resources.” APCC Servs., 297 F. Supp. 2d at 95–96 (internal quotation marks omitted). MTM, however, nowhere explains how the selection of the ad hoc or minority approach, as opposed to the Campbell approach, would make any difference here, let alone “materially affect the course of litigation.” See Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 5–6. This first “controlling question of law” thus does not justify the exceptional step of interlocutory review.

B.

MTM offers three additional “controlling questions of law that warrant interlocutory review.”² These essentially boil down to one overarching question: Can the question of joint-employer status be the basis for a collective action under the FLSA? In its August 2021 opinion, the court concluded that it could. The court reasoned that “MTM’s role in devising [each driver’s] terms of employment is . . . likely to be defined by policies and practices that are broadly applicable to all TSPs,” and that “MTM is likely to be a joint employer for all drivers or for none at all” based on common evidence. Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *5. The court moreover determined that proceeding collectively was “potentially dispositive of the case” because “if Plaintiffs cannot carry their burden to show that MTM is a joint employer” the case ends. Id. at *6. MTM, by contrast, has consistently argued that “there must be evidence of a common FLSA-violating policy or practice to satisfy the similarly situated standard,” see id., and it now contends that the question of joint-employer status as the basis for a collective action warrants interlocutory review. Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 6–10.

The court disagrees. Even if this is a “controlling question of law,” MTM has failed to demonstrate that it satisfies the remaining elements justifying interlocutory review. See APCC Servs., 297 F. Supp. 2d at 95.

² Those questions are (1) “Whether a group of plaintiffs can be ‘similarly situated’ for purposes of an FLSA collective action if they were not subject to any common FLSA-violating policy or practice”; (2) “Whether the existence of a dispute as to whether the members of a collective were jointly employed by a defendant is sufficient to render those individuals ‘similarly situated’ for purposes of an FLSA collective action”; and (3) “Whether an FLSA collective action can be maintained as to particular issues rather than as to an FLSA claim as a whole.” Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 2–3.

First, the court is not convinced that there is “substantial ground for difference of opinion” as to this question. 28 U.S.C. § 1292(b). MTM attempts to establish “substantial ground” by pointing to three out-of-circuit district court cases—two of which the court cited in its August 2021 opinion—specifically finding the question of joint-employment status insufficient to support a collective action. Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 6–8 (first citing Edmonds v. Amazon.com, Inc., No. C19-1613JLR, 2020 WL 5993908 (W.D. Wash. Oct. 9, 2020); then citing Gibbs v. MLK Express Servs., LLC, No. 18-cv-434-FtM-38MRM, 2019 WL 2635746 (M.D. Fla. June 27, 2019); and then citing Arnold v. DirectTV, LLC, No. 10-cv-352-JAR, 2017 WL 1251033 (E.D. Mo. Mar. 31, 2017)); Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *7.³ MTM also emphasizes that “Plaintiffs have identified no case that has ever held that an FLSA collective action may be maintained where . . . the record shows that there is no common” violative policy. Def.’s Reply in Supp. of Def.’s Mot., ECF No. 196, at 4.

MTM is correct that other courts have held that a dispute over joint-employer status does not make plaintiffs “similarly situated” for purposes of the FLSA. Section 1292(b)’s substantial-ground analysis is not, however, an exercise in “keep[ing] score.” Molock v. Whole Foods Mkt. Grp., Inc., 317 F. Supp. 3d 1, 5 (D.D.C. 2018). The court is required to analyze the reasoning of the various decisions and evaluate the “strength of the arguments in opposition” in assessing whether there is substantial ground for dispute. APCC Servs., 297 F. Supp. 2d at 98. For the reasons already explained in its August 2021 opinion, the court is skeptical of the rationale of cases like Edmonds and Gibbs, which rejected certification of a collective action on the joint-employer issue. See Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *5–7. That approach runs counter to the expansive aims of the FLSA, which defines the term “employer” broadly to prevent employers from shielding themselves from liability by operating through intermediaries. See Harris v. Med. Transp. Mgmt., Inc., 300 F. Supp. 3d 234, 245 (D.D.C. 2018) (explaining that the FLSA “intentionally drew the definition of ‘employer’ under the FLSA to have a broad sweep” to impose liability on “businesses that used middlemen to” engage in unlawful employment practices); see also Hoffmann–La Roche Inc. v. Sperling, 493 U.S. 165, 170 (1989) (discussing the purpose of the FLSA of giving “plaintiffs the advantage of lower individual costs to vindicate rights by the pooling of resources,” and benefitting the judicial system “by efficient resolution in one proceeding of common issues of law and fact arising from the same alleged . . . activity”). Nor do those cases offer any explanation for why Congress would have authorized collective actions only for questions of ultimate liability (i.e., whether a policy or practices violates the FLSA), and not threshold questions of liability (i.e., whether a defendant is a joint employer).

MTM also argues that courts have certified FLSA collective actions only where a common FLSA-violating policy or practice is present, demonstrating that “the existence of . . . a common policy or practice has . . . been recognized as a necessary prerequisite to a collective action.” Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 6 (emphasis added). But MTM makes an inferential leap that no appellate court has made. As the court pointed out in its August 2021 opinion, these cases show at most that “a common policy or practice might be sufficient to show party plaintiffs are similarly situated,” not that a common policy or practice is “necessary.” Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *6. In Campbell, for example, as in other similar cases, “the lack of a common FLSA-violating policy was dispositive because it was the only justification for collective action offered by the plaintiffs.” Id. In other words, in those cases, the absence of a common violative policy or practice meant that there was no other ground for a collective action. But MTM cites no circuit authority for the proposition that only a common violative policy or practice can support a collective action. Thus, MTM has not established substantial ground for dispute.

In sum, MTM’s arguments do not extend beyond mere “continued disagreement with the court’s decision.” Wash. Tennis & Educ. Found., 324 F. Supp. 3d at 145 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also In re Vitamins Antitrust Litig., No. 99-197 (TFH), 2000 WL 673936, at *3 (D.D.C. Jan. 27, 2000) (declining to certify for interlocutory appeal where “Petitioners rely on their disagreement with the Court’s [previous] ruling as well as the acknowledged lack of precedent on this issue to demonstrate a substantial ground for difference of opinion” (internal quotation marks omitted)). The Gibbs and Edmonds courts may have concluded on their facts that a collective action could not proceed without a common violative policy or practice, but the court’s assessment of the evidence and claims in this case compels a different conclusion. The court maintains its view that Plaintiffs have adequately demonstrated they are similarly situated as to the material question whether MTM is a joint employer, see Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *7, and MTM has not made a sufficient showing of substantial ground for disagreement as to that holding.

MTM also has not demonstrated that interlocutory review will materially advance the disposition of the litigation. To satisfy that requirement, MTM must show that interlocutory appellate review “would generate significant savings in resources for both the courts and the litigant[.]” Educ. Assistance Found., 2014 WL 12780253, at *3 (quoting McKenzie v. Kennickell,

No. 73-0974, 1986 WL 32653, at *2 (D.D.C. Oct. 27, 1986)). MTM asserts that “[i]f the Circuit Court of Appeals grants review and holds that maintaining certification of a collective action is not proper in this case, this litigation will revert to an action involving only three plaintiffs,” which would in turn “dramatically impact both the scope and length of the future proceedings in this action.” Def.’s § 1292(b) Mem. at 10. The alternative, MTM claims, is a “wide-ranging procedure” of conducting “trial individually or in small groups of plaintiffs” on remaining questions of liability and damages, which would “require at least 53 different trials if not more”—consuming “more time and resources than the three-plaintiff case that would remain in the event an interlocutory appeal resulted in decertification now.” Id.

But MTM has not explained how, exactly, the burden on the parties and the court would change if the Circuit were to undo the certification of the collective. As this court has previously noted, whether this case proceeds now as a collective or three-plaintiff action, MTM and Plaintiffs likely will use evidence of different TSPs’ policies—already generated as part of class and collective discovery—to demonstrate that MTM is not a joint employer. Harris, 2021 WL 3472381, at *5. Plaintiffs represented in their opposition to MTM’s motion to stay proceedings that they “do not intend to seek further discovery before moving for summary judgment” on the joint-employer question. Pls.’ Opp’n to Def.’s Mot. to Stay Proceedings, ECF No. 193, at 4. MTM said otherwise. See Reply in Supp. of Def.’s Mot. to Stay Proceedings During Pendency of Rule 23(f) Appeal, ECF No. 194, at 5. The court gave MTM the opportunity to describe what discovery it hopes to take on the joint-employer issue, and how such discovery would differ if the case were to proceed as a collective or a three-plaintiff case, and its response was insubstantial: MTM did not articulate a difference between the two. See Hr’g Tr. (draft), Nov. 10, 2021. It does not naturally follow that fewer plaintiffs will mean a narrower scope of discovery. The court can imagine a scenario wherein MTM wishes to take discovery from TSPs other than those that employed the three Plaintiffs to show that it was not a joint employer to any driver. It is therefore not clear to the court how a decertified collective would spare the parties and the court significant resources in discovery with respect to the joint-employer question.

What's more, it is possible that decertification would not lessen the burden on the court and parties at all. Plaintiffs have indicated that "if MTM were to prevail in an interlocutory appeal and secure decertification of the collective, the result would be individualized trials for both the three named plaintiffs and for up to the more than one-hundred fifty party plaintiffs in the FLSA collective action." Pls.' Opp'n to Def.'s Mot. to Amend and Certify Order of Aug. 6, 2021 for Interlocutory Appeal Pursuant to 28 U.S.C. Section 1292(b), ECF No. 195 [hereinafter Pls.' § 1292(b) Opp'n], at 8. If that were to occur, the court likely would consolidate the cases for proceedings on the joint-employer question, leaving the court (and the parties) in no different position, practically speaking, than if the case were to proceed collectively now. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 42. Either way, whether as a collective action or as a consolidation of individual actions, the joint-employer question likely will not be tested and resolved only for a small subset of drivers. Certification for interlocutory review therefore would not "hasten or at least simplify the litigation in some material way, such as by significantly narrowing the issues, conserving judicial resources, or saving the parties from needless expense." Molock, 317 F. Supp. 3d at 6; see also United States ex rel. Pogue v. Diabetes Treatment Ctrs. of Am., 576 F. Supp. 2d 128, 133 (D.D.C. 2008) (denying certification for interlocutory review where "regardless of the outcome of interlocutory appeal, trial of the case would still have to occur to reach the litigation's 'ultimate termination'").

III.

Defendants also have moved to stay trial-court proceedings pending the outcome of the Rule 23(f) motion before the D.C. Circuit. An appeal under Rule 23(f) “does not stay proceedings in the district court unless the district judge or the court of appeals so orders.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f). Such an order is thus not automatic but discretionary and “requires a demonstration that the probability of error in the class certification decision is high enough that the costs of pressing ahead in the district court exceed the costs of waiting.” DL v. District of Columbia, 6 F. Supp. 3d 133, 135 (D.D.C. 2014) (internal quotation marks omitted).⁴

Under the circumstances, the court is not persuaded that a stay is required in the short term. By taking three months to consider the motions before the court, the court already effectively stayed discovery for that period. Additionally, MTM is free to come back to the court to seek a stay if the D.C. Circuit decides to grant the Rule 23(f) motion. A stay until such decision is made is not warranted.

This case has been pending since 2017 and has reached only the certification stage. It will continue to move forward unless the D.C. Circuit signals otherwise.

IV.

For the foregoing reasons, MTM’s Motion to Amend and Certify, ECF No. 189, and Motion to Stay Proceedings During Pendency of Rule 23(f) Appeal, ECF No. 190, are denied. The parties shall (1) file a Joint Status Report by December 6, 2021, that proposes a schedule for further

⁴ Both parties frame their arguments in terms of the four factors used in this District to consider motions for preliminary injunctive relief. See In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 208 F.R.D. 1, 3 (D.D.C. 2002). However, as the parties acknowledge, the D.C. Circuit has not articulated a standard for determining whether a stay is appropriate pending a Rule 23(f) appeal, see DL, 6 F. Supp. 3d at 135, and so the court need not evaluate the four-factor In re Lorazepam analysis as it applies to this case.
