Number of Lobbyist-Fundraisers for Presidential Candidates Already Exceeds 2004 Totals

(Updated March 10, 2008¹)

Presidential candidates already have recruited more lobbyist-fundraisers in this election cycle than they did for the entire 2004 campaign.

To date, candidates still in the race have recruited 174 federal lobbyists to serve as “bundlers” (a term for fundraisers whose success at raising money is monitored by the candidates). In the 2004 cycle, the candidates who disclosed their big fundraisers’ names – George Bush, John Kerry and Howard Dean – had a total of 127 lobbyist-bundlers.

Republican John McCain has more lobbyist-fundraisers than any other candidate, with nearly twice as many as runner-up Rudy Giuliani. Among Democrats, Hillary Clinton has the most lobbyist-fundraisers, which is not surprising because her chief opponents have adopted a policy of not accepting help from current lobbyists. Barack Obama and John Edwards each have bundlers who previously registered as lobbyists and are counted in this study.

Candidate	Number of Lobbyist Bundlers
John McCain	65
Rudy Giuliani	35
Hillary Clinton	22
Mitt Romney	16
Barack Obama	14
John Edwards	3

Public Citizen recently learned of many new lobbyist-bundlers for McCain. Twenty-four registered lobbyists were among at least 29 co-chairs for a McCain fundraiser held Monday [Jan. 28, 2008] at Charlie Palmer Steak, a tony lobbyists’ hangout. Each co-chair was expected to raise at least $10,000, according to an invitation for the event posted on the website of Politico, a Washington newspaper. Some of these lobbyist-fundraisers were previously unknown to the public.

Public Citizen maintains a clearinghouse of the presidential campaigns' bundlers at www.WhiteHouseforSale.org. The website explains differences in candidates' reporting policies and Public Citizen's methodology for classifying fundraisers as bundlers.

¹ Public Citizen removed an individual named Miriam Sapiro from this list upon learning that the federal records classifying her as a lobbyist are inaccurate.

Public Citizen has revised its methodology to exclude individuals who filed forms indicating an intent to lobby but ultimately did not report any actual lobbying contacts. This change resulted in the removal of six bundlers from 2008 and nine bundlers from 2004.
